Command And Conquer Generals Language.cab.rar Serial Key Adobe Dreamweaver C D.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a process for producing metal-oxide (M-O) inclusions in an active alumina base material, which is a precursor of a filter material to be used in removing fine particles from a working fluid in a fuel cell. 2. Description of the Prior Art Since the FFC, which is an electric cell generating electric energy with high efficiency by utilizing the reverse reaction of the so-called water electrolysis, can provide energy of high density, it is expected as a power source of vehicles and electronic appliances. The FFC has recently been studied as a power source for a space craft, and a great effort has been made to develop a fuel cell which utilizes a solid polymer as the electrolyte. As the electrolyte, a cation-exchange resin is generally used. However, the cation-exchange resin is easily charged with water contained in the air (air-dried material), and this adversely affects the electrode and liquid flow in the fuel cell. Moreover, the ions are difficult to be replenished, thus reducing the power-generating ability. In order to solve the above problems, it has been proposed to use a porous filter material composed of active alumina as the material constituting the electrolyte. However, in the conventional production process for the porous filter material, the porous filter material is obtained by sintering a powder comprising active alumina particles with the particle diameters of from 0.1 to 0.3.mu.m. Therefore, it is necessary to reduce the particle diameters of active alumina to an extremely small level so as to reduce the particle diameters of the active alumina. As a result, many fine active alumina particles are produced. The finely divided active alumina particles stick to the surfaces of alumina particles, resulting in a low productivity of the filter material. Moreover, in the producing process, the active alumina particles are maintained in the air for a long time, thus producing a reduction in specific surface area.Guest post by Joe Hoft After President Trump's first 6 months in office concluded the Fake News Media began to turn on him and said he was
