Chronic administration of progesterone to rhesus monkeys does not impair the kinetics of contraception. Female rhesus monkeys were administered estradiol-17 beta and progesterone chronically. These animals became pregnant when progesterone alone was administered. The onset of pregnancy was found not to be the result of impaired kinetics of pregnancy recognition. Progesterone seems to have a contraceptive effect on the uterus; its action is not related to an increase in peripheral progesterone levels. The nature of the gestating monkey's endometrium is unclear.Q: How to combine a range of a column to a list in pandas I have a DataFrame and I want to create a list from the rows in a column, that is a range. I know how to apply a function and select a range.
