We are thrilled to announce that we are partnering with ELEAGUE to bring this to the community, and have published a YouTube livestream that will allow fans to share in the excitement of the opening match in detail. For more on FIFA 22, our entire team of content creators are available to give you more in-depth insights through our livestream coverage and our preview, "The Ultimate Guide to FIFA 22": Interview with Creative Director, Jordan Mintzer : FIFA and brands like EA and Disney are on a journey to become one. Is the new sports genre the next stage in this evolution? Jordan Mintzer : There is still a lot of room to grow and evolve. It's hard to point to an exact moment that this genre has even began. It is still too early for us to gauge where we are with it, but I think we are heading in the right direction. To date, the genre has mostly been centered around existing content, whether that is Madden or FIFA - we now are seeing companies push for new voices to compete in the space. FIFA is now well-established, and more importantly a brand, and we're seeing them become a dominant force in the space with the "Born Ready" teams. I think there are just more opportunities now to come in and start creating stuff, and I think that is going to have a strong positive effect for us. FIFA is only the third iteration of sports games. What is it about FIFA and football that you guys feel is here to stay? Jordan Mintzer : I think a couple things are at play here. One is that football and soccer is an incredible platform that has an incredible amount of longevity, and you can see that the sport is the world's game right now. Another part is that, first and foremost, it's our most watched and played sport - well, it was on TV. So there is that "cool" and that "football." And then, the other part is that for years, we were the most popular sports game, so it's hard to compete with what the PS4 and Xbox One have done. What will the future look like for FIFA, on and offline? Jordan Mintzer : I think this platform is going to shape the future of the industry - not just for us, but for everyone - because you can do more than just consume it, and I think that

- Tackle decision-making has been enhanced with new AI that reacts and adapts to real-life situations, offering more options for future skilled play. For example, when receiving a through ball, a player is able to choose whether to use his/her momentum to shoot from distance; turn in a more dangerous direction; be more static and create a situation where he/she can make a better option.
- FIFA Ultimate Team is also available through Xbox Game Pass.
- Smoothed touch controls, ball physics and visual improvements increase the player experience throughout the game.
- New Game Vision* is a new camera system that interprets the rules of the game in a view that is more natural and less repetitive.
- HyperMotion Technology is also available for In-Game Ad-Hoc together with game offers.
- A new worldwide visualisation of the MatchDay details on the Spotlight screen, with information on all 22 players and the referee, plus individual attributes and contracts.

- Quick Likes feedback is now integrated into the mouse and triggers, so you don't have to be within the game and pause to like a goal.
