In addition to TEs, other repetitive DNAs, such as telomeric repeats and satellites, have also been reported in the genomes of aplastic anemia patients. In particular, loss of heterozygosity (LOH) has been implicated in the aplastic anemia associated with myelodysplastic syndrome \[@B54-viruses-06-00281\],\[@B55-viruses-06-00281\]. The observation that most patients with aplastic anemia have deletion of the centromere and telomere region of chromosomes 1 and 2, respectively \[@B55-viruses-06-00281\], suggests that chromosomal abnormalities are also a cause of aplastic anemia. In regard to the reactivation of endogenous retrovirus (ERV), it was reported that long terminal repeat (LTR)-type endogenous retroviruses, especially T cell receptor locus ERVs, are upregulated in T-cell-derived aplastic anemia \[@B56-viruses-06-00281\]. Bialas *et al.* observed that the levels of ERVs in peripheral blood mononuclear cells were increased in patients with aplastic anemia associated with cGVHD \[@B57-viruses-06-00281\]. They also found that aplastic anemia patients also had more ERV-related expression in e79caf774b
